

The particles of a pure metal can move past each other better than the particles in an alloy. This makes the alloy